Logline:

The Ranas - a happily patriarchal joint family - yearn for the birth of a baby boy to continue the family line. However when their youngest son secretly joins an erotic dance theatre and falls for an ambitious trans starlet, their impossible love story slowly illuminates the entire Rana family's desire for sexual rebellion.

Short Synopsis:

Set in bustling Lahore, the Ranas are, on the surface, a functional, patriarchal family. The household is made up of Abbas, the elderly father, the older brother, Saleem and his wife Nucchi, and younger brother Haider and his wife Mumtaz.

Much to the embarrassment of his traditional father, Haider is the one in his relationship who stays at home, whilst Mumtaz goes to work at the salon every day - a job that she loves.

When Haider gets a job in an erotic theatre as a backup dancer for trans starlet, Biba, and starts secretly dating her, everything changes, and the cracks that have always been there, tear the family apart.

Long Synopsis:

Set in bustling Lahore, the Ranas are, on the surface, a happy patriarchal family. The family is made up of Abbas, the elderly father, the elder brother, Saleem and his wife Nucchi, and younger brother Haider and his wife Mumtaz. Much to the embarrassment of his father, Haider, is the one in his relationship who stays at home, whilst Mumtaz goes to work at the salon every day, which she loves.

When Haider gets a job in an erotic theatre as a backup dancer for trans starlet, Biba, everything changes, and the cracks that have always been there, start to tear the family apart. Mumtaz, dutifully, has to become the stay-at-home wife she never wanted to be, whilst her husband enjoys his new found freedom. Haider starts to secretly date Biba, and is away from home more and more. Meanwhile, Mumtaz feels more and more alienated.

Both Haider and Mumtaz suffer from the same social frustrations of having to adhere to the traditional norms of the society they live in, whilst both yearning for social and sexual freedom. This tension will ultimately result in Mumtaz taking her own life - the only thing she feels she has control over - and taking with it, the life of the so-wanted Ranas unborn baby boy.

- LGBTQ+ cinema
- Trans rights groups
- Pakistan community/Asian film fans

Trans Community

I think this review from Autostraddle by a critic who I believe is trans is useful to read. The film does have problems in its approach to its trans character and cis programmers and freelancers probably should be aware of.

Joyland (dir. Saim Sadiq)

This is not a great trans film — but it is a great film with a trans lead. Saim Sadiq’s debut feature Joyland is more concerned with its queer male protagonist acting out his repressed desires through a trans woman than the trans woman herself. Usually this would bother me, but this movie is too good — and too respectful of that trans character — for me to care. There is room for all our stories, and considering this is only the second Pakistani feature I’ve ever seen, there is plenty new about this tale. And after all, most of us have had the experience of fucking someone who seems to have more interest in being us, or, at least, being as freely themselves as they perceive us to be. Ultimately, that’s what this film is about: freedom. Freedom from our families, freedom from expectations.

If there was a canon of chaser cinema, this would be its masterpiece, but I’ll take a specific, delicate film about a “chaser” and his wife and family over what we usually get: poorly written trans media made by a chaser. It helps that Alina Khan gives an incredible performance as Biba, the trans character. It also helps that — unlike, say, Euphoria — the movie is very explicit about Biba’s womanhood and the man’s error in viewing her as a queer experiment. He may be queer, but Biba is a woman, and his interest in her is not what makes him queer. This is a beautiful, painful film about sexuality and gender, and, for once, the trans woman isn’t the recipient of that pain.

Young Audiences

In collaboration with distributors, the FAN Young Consultants (a group of 10 under 30 year olds working in film exhibition) select new release titles that they would like to highlight as particularly engaging for their peers and young people aged 16-30 (or segments therein). Working with the FAN Young Audiences lead Moira McVean, the group creates light-touch marketing packs with digital assets, eventising and social media marketing ideas aimed specifically at supporting exhibitors attracting younger audiences to their venues.

Feedback from the Young Consultants on Joyland:

Yasmin Begum: “Joyland is a timely film in its exploration of gender and sexuality. It’s a momentous time for Pakistani film creation and exhibition away from larger blockbusters and in addressing topic that are taboo.”

I think Joyland will have a wide appeal across different groups because of the fact that it deals with issues and themes of sexuality and gender. Likewise, there is a growing number of people that are increasingly interested in world cinema. Pakistani film is hard to come by for a number of reasons, making Joyland stand out not only because of its acclaim at Cannes, but merely by existing.

The film is gorgeous, layered, textured, evocative, and it will hit a note for those with a lived experience of the LGBTQ community, or of growing up around topics and families like the ones that are portrayed in Joyland. As a third generation Welsh Pakistani person who is LGBTQ, this film was an emotional watch because of its portrayal of gender and sexuality, which was not something that was widely discussed."

James Calver "This film finally delivered something for me at Cannes that had been missing up until that point – a poignant Queer story. What was originally sold to me as a terse drama focusing on the romantic relationship between a young man and a trans woman who works at the nearby erotic theatre turned out to be a beautiful and honest tale that was filled with laughter and tears. At its core, Joyland is a family drama, but it's the performance of Alina Khan as Biba, the trans performer and erotic dancer, that overshadows everything else and elevates the film. All her scenes carry with them a poignancy that the others do not, and Khan truly rises to the occasion. It felt to me that Biba's character was slightly underutilised in the closing act of the film, but that doesn't do too much to detract from the whole piece. As in insight into a community that is rarely seen on screen in Europe, it was an amazing and contemplative experience."

"I liked the film, it really took me by surprise. It showed the development of an ordinary guy & the struggles most trans women go through within different societies and places. It had a good balance of drama, dance and thrill which was what kept me drawn in."

"Beautiful tragedy. I loved the cinematography and the costumes, very authentic. Babi was an iconic character."

“A daring Pakistani debut centering on identity and what it means to be Pakistani. Joyland was a breath of fresh air from Pakistan, especially because the industry there likes to tiptoe around topics such as transgender identities.”

“People in the west often forget how hard it is to be your true self in the Global south as you give up so much because of culture. This film story allows us to see this perspective from the different family members and what happens when you put others before yourself.”

“Great film depicting society’s oppression of identity and how cultural traditions oblige one to conform. Great film.”

“A drama film about a man trying to find his way through complex relationships and strict societal pressure. The film was very emotional and provides a UK audience with an insight into a culture and community we don’t usually get to see on screen. The visuals and music are both really well done.”

Joyland: campaign and marketing ideas

The focus of BFI FAN’s support for new releases is developing diverse audiences:

- Price: If you have a young person/student ticket offer, why not promote it alongside Joyland
- Experience: Research into audiences highlights how important the whole experience is. Joyland is packed full of ideas - trans issues, society taboos, representation, etc
- Alternatively: Reach out to the distributor for a possible talent Q&A
- Themes: Focus on the fact that it is a film all about issues facing people today - discrimination, trans issues under threat etc

Promote your screenings

Find out how to tell new audiences about your events and make them unforgettable with our simple guides:

- A Simple Guide To: DIGITAL MARKETING: Marketing your events online can be as simple or as complex as you want it to be. To get you started, here are some easy steps to promote your event online.
- A Simple Guide To: AUGMENTING FILM SCREENINGS: Putting on a film screening doesn’t have to be about just showing a film. Venues can make their events stand out and attract new audiences by augmenting their screenings with something extra.
- Inclusive Cinema’s Guide to Being LGBTQI+ friendly in your cinema: Whether you are running a specific programme to engage with LGBTQ+ audiences or simply hoping to grow LGBTQ+ representation in your existing screenings, it’s really important to remember some key things to make sure you are sensitively and appropriately programming, promoting, and welcoming audiences in your cinema.

Event Ideas

With thanks to Young Consultant Yasmin Begum for sharing her insight and the following ideas.

Q&A event/collaboration with Gaysians

This film being from the global south and with a trans focus can allow for some really interesting programming relating to potential speakers.

For instance, there could be the opportunity to approach organisations like Gaysians who highlight and support LGBTQ voices in the Asian community

These groups both serve minority ethnic communities who are from the LGBTQ community. Within this plan, there is the opportunity to discuss both race or ethnicity or heritage alongside LGBTQIA topics to bring both together within an intersectional framework.

This film is also, broadly, a film about LGBTQIA identity that happens to be set in Pakistan. It's part of a shift within film towards the representation of underrepresented communities, and the family being Muslim, being Panjabi, speaking Panjabi and Urdu are layers to this work.

Alongside approaching LGBTQIA organisations that serve minority ethnic communities, there is an opportunity to approach, broadly speaking, other LGBTQIA groups. These groups could be in a cinema's local area, such as Pride organisations, Stonewall, and other groups that serve specific areas. In Wales, groups to approach would be Glitter, a BAME LGBTQ organisation, and the Welsh Ballroom Community. If the cinema is in a university town, potential speakers could be local LGBTQIA activists or people from LGBTQ groups overall. Pakistani people and those in the Pakistani diaspora and/or Panjabi diaspora may be of particular interest to invite as speakers because of the film's location in Lahore, Panjab, combined with the Partition of India in 1947.

Engagement and Outreach

For a while, it was unclear if Joyland would have a UK-wide distribution. Most films from South Asia that are exhibited within Britain are from the wider industries of Bollywood and larger blockbusters compared to independent cinema. Pakistan doesn't have a great wealth of independent cinema, for various reasons. There will be groups who may not regularly attend the cinema or engage with its services- say, if there's a cafe there or something similar- but may consider attending a showing like this.

Therefore, personal invitations ought to be distributed to groups and where the groups engage with different communities, consideration given to whether or not the cinema can afford to comp tickets to community groups as a gesture of goodwill. Long-term, this will yield, potentially, different communities coming into the cinema and a wider knowledge of the cinema and its programming.

Food

Alongside the above, there could be an opportunity to have catering after a showing with a question and answer session. Pakistani food is really popular in the United Kingdom, even if a lot of it has been cooked under the guise of British Indian Restaurant cooking. Samosas, pakoras, lassi, small finger foods and drinks, there's no need for anything particularly heavy or for a sit-down meal. It could be themed as part of an evening with Joyland. Joyland could be paired with some other shorter films, but maybe not, given its length and the best interests of audience comfort relating to diverse audiences. Sometimes, it's intense to sit there for over two hours, and Joyland is just over two hours as a film. Local Film Hubs and organisation can support with funding to cover eventising any catering or to cover the cost of any speakers fees.

Audience

The target audience for this film vary. In terms of age, it's anyone above 16 years old. For people in the Pakistani or South Asian diaspora, it could be everyone because of the fact that it's a Pakistani film in Urdu and Panjabi. For LGBTQIA people and allies, this film will be of interest to different ages from 16-30 or to all because of the subject matter, which is underscored by the fact that it's from Pakistan. That could be a bit of a novelty because of a lack of independent cinema from Pakistan and the illegality of homosexuality within Pakistan, and a lack of information about hijra communities in Britain. For cinemas serving areas with a larger South Asian diaspora than average, the audience varies across race, class, sex, and gender because of the relationship that the South Asian diaspora shares to the population overall in Britain. South Asian people are the largest ethnic minority community, and in places such as South Birmingham, there are areas with higher proportions of Pakistani people and Kashmiri people. This film is at the intersection of audience development and conversations on equality, which allows for a potential for some fascinating audience development and engagement relating to this title in an organic manner.

Potential Guest Speakers

If you're booking to book speakers or commission writers or any workshops or anything relating to the title, these people could be potential people to email relating to their work and their capacity. This is a list of people who are South Asian in Britain or who have South Asian heritage as part of the Black, Asian, and Minority Ethnic community and who are also LGBTQIA people, so their identity sits at the confluence of ethnicity/race/heritage, and of sexuality and gender. This is a bit of a double whammy, as we are in the habit in exhibition of discussing one characteristic because of the public sector equality duty, but not looking at say, where communities with different protected characteristics coalesce

- Sabah Choudhrey, a writer, campaigner, and activist who is British-Pakistani and trans who has written substantially on both race and trans identity in Britain
- Asifa Lahore, a British Pakistani drag queen who is LGBTQIA
- Saima Razzaq, British Pakistani activist and campaigner and Head of Diversity and Inclusion Engagement at Birmingham Pride
- Shash Appan, British-Tamil trans anti racist activist, writer, and campaigner founder of Trans Mutual Aid Cymru based in Wales
- Alia Ramna, a Welsh Pakistani trans woman and dancer with the Welsh Ballroom Community
